Woodcocks and Warblers: Conservation Opportunities in Minnesota

American Woodcock and Golden-winged Warblers have both experienced range-wide population declines. Both species rely on young forest habitat, which has declined throughout the breeding range of both species. Tom Cooper and Tom Will, both with the Fish and Wildlife Service, will discuss the population status of these species, conservation actions currently being implemented to reverse these declines, and stewardship potential in Minnesota. Join us to learn more about these fascinating birds and how you can help them.

Human....Nature?

By Ruthann Yaeger

From large man-made events like the Gulf oil spill to more everyday occurrences such as a farmer's decision to plant more corn, or a homeowner's decision to use toxic chemicals on his lawn, we take for granted what nature gives us and believe our personal priorities are either too important or don't matter in the overall scheme of things.

We commonly declare that some animal, bird or plant is more or less desirable than another, but how do we know that by eliminating a plant or insect, we haven't removed a food source that other creatures who may perform some service for us, need to survive? Or opened the door to some other living thing that is detrimental to those creatures we favor? We often don't know, but we act anyway.

We seem to have lost the most essential attribute in dealing with our natural heritage – humility. The earth is limited, yet we act as if it is infinite. Backed by our beliefs, we claim to know what's best, or at least what doesn't matter.

Increasingly, we impose our narrow agenda and make demands of nature with small regard for the complexity of nature's connections, of which we understand frighteningly little. We want X, and Y seems to work, so we plunge ahead without considering other consequences.

But human history abounds with disasters of hubris and miscalculation: Asian carp, destructive insects, buckthorn, kudzu, wild parsnip, zebra mussels and a multitude of other invasive imports - many deliberately introduced to "solve" some problem - have cost us billions to control. To say nothing of some dams, projects and resource extractions that have destroyed lives and livelihoods, and poisoned people's water and lands.

Whatever disaster we create, we continue to believe we can fix it by employing some engineering or technology that often has even worse consequences later. Our foolish pride is the stuff of nightmares, but we don't seem able to learn any real lessons from it.

If we really care about what kind of world we leave to our children and grandchildren, then first, foremost and always, we must approach our natural heritage with the humility and careful study it demands. Given the myriad essential services nature freely provides for us, it is not "worshipping" nature to thoughtfully consider the consequences our actions may have on it.

We have indeed lit a candle in the darkness with all the knowledge we now have, but the darkness is vast, and there be dragons...

Pine Cone Feeder

What you'll need:

- ◆ Pine cones
- ◆ Birdseed
- ◆ Butter knife
- ◆ Paper plate
- ◆ Ribbon or yarn
- ◆ Scissors
- ◆ Smooth peanut butter (not chunky)

How to make it:

- ◆ Cut a moderate length of yarn or ribbon
- ◆ Tie the ribbon in a knot around the pine cone near the top (about 3 sections down).
- ◆ Tie a loop in the other end of the ribbon to hang.
- ◆ Use the knife to get a large clump of peanut butter on the paper plate.
- ◆ Gently spread peanut butter inside the pine cone and around the edges.
- ◆ Place birdseed on the plate and roll the pine cone in the seeds.
- ◆ Hang the bird feeder on the tree.

Now enjoy watching the birds eat their treat!

Tip: best for use in cold weather. May spoil in warm weather.

GBBC Goes Global!

Beginning in 2013, people from anywhere in the world will be able to participate in the Great Backyard Bird Count.

Save the dates so you can participate in the first worldwide Great Backyard Bird Count (GBBC), Friday, Feb 15 through Monday, Feb 18, 2013.

To make it possible for people everywhere to participate, the GBBC will be integrated with eBird, a citizen-science project created by the Cornell Lab of Ornithology and National Audubon Society in 2002 that went global in 2010. Our partner, Bird Studies Canada, administers the eBird Canada portal.

Benefits include:

Global access: participants will be able to submit checklists from any location in the world, and in four languages!

Precise locations: More accurate GBBC location data will make your observations more useful and easier for you to track over time.

Year-round access: Although the GBBC is a four-day project, you will be able to use your account to track your bird sightings year round in eBird.

Better visualization: Interactive maps will allow you to explore bird observations in much greater detail than ever before.

Corrections: If you realize you've entered erroneous information, you can go back into your reports anytime to make corrections or changes.

No dual-entry: eBird users will no longer have to enter their information twice and can simply enter their GBBC counts via eBird.

If you have never submitted a checklist to eBird before, you'll create a user name and password. You'll be able to use the same user name and password for the Great Backyard Bird Count in February!
